

Bachelor of Arts in Criminal Justice

COURSE ROTATION PLAN | SUMMER 2027 to SPRING 2028

The University of Colorado Denver's Bachelor of Arts in Criminal Justice offers students exciting courses that challenge them to think about many different things related to crime and justice such as, how we define crime, the factors that cause crime—things like trauma and characteristics of the places people live, and how crime impacts the individuals who are victimized and the communities they live in.

Understanding Course Modalities

Choosing the right course modality can help you learn in the environment that best fits your schedule, preferences, and learning style. At the School of Public Affairs, courses are offered in four primary formats:

In-Person	100% of instruction is delivered face-to-face You'll attend class on campus and interact face-to-face with instructors and classmates.
Independent Study	No traditional face-to-face classroom attendance is required. Students work primarily independently under the general supervision and guidance of the instructor.
Hybrid	Most of the course is in-person, with some online components (asynchronous and/or Zoom). You'll experience a mix of in-person and online work. Some classes meet on campus; other classes may include videos, Canvas modules, or Zoom sessions.
Remote	Attend class live via Zoom during scheduled times—no in-person meetings; may have some asynchronous instructional delivery. You'll join live class Zoom sessions at set times. These sessions are interactive and count as your "class time."
Online	100% of the course is delivered asynchronously online; no set class meetings. You'll complete the course material on your own schedule each week. While there are no live meetings, weekly deadlines and active participation (e.g., discussion posts) are expected.
